

Stories of Death

The turn of October to November is a time of the year where the veil between the two worlds is traditionally considered to be the thinnest. As nature plunges into darkness, we are reminded of an eternal truth... that life is always followed by death. ... while in the spring we will be reminded that death is always followed by life. Throughout the world, this occasion is celebrated in various forms: All Hallow's Day, Samhain, Halottak napja, Dia de los Muertos...

In our contemporary society, death is a taboo – and that leads to a lot of fear and lot of lonely grieving.

At this event, we will sit around the fire and break the taboo. You will be invited – if you like – to share a story about an encounter with death: the departure of a loved one, a sign from the other side, perhaps a near-death or shared-death experience.

We will explore what we know about this mysterious transition and learn about the evidence that death is not the end, rather the birth of consciousness into a new reality.
